

UNITED KINGDOM

The Doctor Fighting for the Global Legalisation of Abortion

By Noor Spanjer

March 30, 2016

(whatsapp://send?
text=http://www.vice.com/
rebecca-gomperts-
876)

Rebecca Gomperts. All photos by Raymond van Mil.

advertisement

Rebecca Gomperts is the brain behind Women on Waves (<http://www.womenonwaves.org/>) – a Dutch organisation famous for performing abortions in international waters, defying local anti-abortion laws. WoW has travelled to places like Spain, Poland and Morocco, stirring up controversy across the board – something that Gomperts admits was always the point. Alongside Women on Waves, she runs Women on Web (<https://www.womenonweb.org/>) – a website that helps women from all over the world gain access to abortion pills.

I meet Rebecca at a small marina near Amsterdam, where her boat is docked. "Honestly, I spend most of my time behind my computer," she says. "People often want to come work for us because they have this idea that we're always out in the field, but we mostly just sit behind our desks."

Rebecca cuts a small, wiry frame and speaks almost curtly about the cause she dedicated her life to: the global legalisation of abortion.

My favourite thing about this job is finding legal loopholes and new opportunities to do things differently.

In Vessel, (<http://vesselthefilm.com/>) a 2014 documentary about her boat project, there's a scene where Rebecca ducks and weaves through a crowd of angry Spaniards attempting to prevent the abortion boat from docking. She proudly delivers a speech about legalising abortion while being berated by dozens of angry protestors. Does the criticism ever bother her?

"I don't get scared that easily," she says. "Things like getting pelted with eggs in Poland don't phase me. I think the fact that everything we do is so public helps. There are cameras everywhere, which obviously offers a form of protection. It's important that you don't walk away from these people; it's a symbolic moment. If you walk away, they win."

There was one moment she was genuinely scared, though. "On one of my trips, my kids came with me. We had a girl taking care of them on land but she brought them by the marina because they wanted to come and see what I do for themselves. It wasn't planned. As they were walking towards us down the quay, an anti-abortion march also started heading in our direction, but a lot faster. I remember thinking, 'I hope they don't harm my kids.' Fortunately, nothing happened, but I'm never bringing them to work again."

Watch our documentary, 'The Abortion Pill':

The abortion boat hasn't set sail for a while now. The idea, she says, feels "dated" to her now. Instead, her attention has shifted to getting abortion pills to women who need them. Last year, her organisation travelled to Germany, where they flew a drone stacked with abortion pills ( abortion-pill) from Frankfurt an der Oder into Polish territory, where the drugs are illegal. "My favourite thing about this job is finding legal loopholes and new opportunities to do things differently. That's why it was so much fun to fly that drone. It was completely new, and the laws surrounding drones are still relatively uncharted territory."

She's almost stoic when talking about whether or not she has ever any doubts about what she's doing. "Ultimately, it's about informing women about the abortion pill. Letting them know that it exists and that they have other options than going to someone who'll massage their stomach or insert dangerous objects into their vagina. They can take the pills and do it themselves," she said. "By flying the pills across borders, we make sure the medication is delivered to these people in a very public way. That's very different from sending them through the post – which, in many ways, is very clandestine. We always take a good look at what we legally can get away with, and if we do end up getting sued, we deal with that as it comes. Women on Waves has been sued multiple times; the law isn't static and it's subject to interpretation. I enjoy seeing the possibilities in that."

Rebecca Gomperts

Rebecca graduated with a degree in medicine but quickly realised it wasn't for her. "I didn't feel like I could make enough of a difference as a doctor or that it brought out the best in me," she says. "And for me those two things are very closely related. There are plenty of specialists that are far better than I am and for me it just wasn't what I needed to do with my life," she says.

While trying to figure out what she did need to do with her life, Rebecca went to art school. But there was something missing there too. So she went to Greenpeace, which was where the idea for Women on Waves began to take shape. "That's where everything came together for me – everything that I find important in life and society. I think it is important for people to work towards a better world," she says. But her brief career as a doctor did spark something in her. While working as a trainee doctor in Africa – where she also had to help perform an illegal abortion – she first realised she was an activist. "I saw a lot of women come in with life-threatening complications," she says. "At the time, I didn't quite realise that it was almost always because of abortion being illegal. I mistakenly blamed it on Africa's fragile healthcare system. The fact that it is illegal means that a lot of people think of abortion as something that's inherently bad or wrong and then people stop thinking about it altogether. It becomes taboo and it turns into something hidden. But abortion is a human right. Access to proper healthcare is a human right."

She's never lost sight of that. Even now, the thousands of emails Women on Web receive ~~(each month)~~ spur her to keep going. "My work has taken over my life," she admits. "It can be pretty intense, because you're dealing in a very concrete and real way with women's lives. Unwanted pregnancy is always an urgent matter, because you only have three months to decide – or nine weeks if you're talking about the abortion pill. This can cause a huge amount of stress, especially in countries where it's illegal."

That said, many of the women who contact her are closer to her home in the Netherlands. "I received an email from an African girl working as an au pair this morning. She only just arrived in the country and she's pregnant. Her host family can't know and she doesn't know what to do. She called a clinic but they told her that, without health insurance, the procedure would cost €370. That's more than what the girl gets paid in a month. So now she's reached out to us. Even in the Netherlands, there are still situations where people don't get access to proper care."

According to the World Health Organisation, 42 million abortions are performed every year, and half of those are in countries where abortions are illegal. Every year, over 48,000 women die during the process.

Seeing access to abortion as a global issue is key, according to Rebecca. "It doesn't matter where you live in the world – women have unwanted pregnancies everywhere and they need access to abortion options." According to the World Health Organisation

(http://www.who.int/reproductivehealth/publications/unsafe_abortion/induced_abortion), over 43 million abortions are performed every year and nearly half of those are unsafe. Every year, over 47,000 women die during that process. "After I received the email from that au pair this morning, I rang a clinic that will probably be able to help her. If they can't, then we have another solution for her. It shouldn't be this hard. There shouldn't be any barrier for a girl like that."

Some have suggested that Women on Waves' staunch approach is not only attention seeking but could even be classed as neocolonial in its attempt to bring abortion to women globally. This, she says is a "political argument" that has nothing to do with what she does. She points to other organisations like Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International and Doctors without Borders, that are all working with other countries and local organisations to draw attention to and solve global issues.

"They're never accused of being neo-colonialists," she says. "It's an argument that is only used by those who are against abortion, and to those people I say: If you're against abortion then don't get one. But if you think that other people shouldn't have access, then you're the true colonialist. I couldn't care less about anyone who says that. The grateful emails I get are more important. It's so special to be able to literally save someone's life. As for the rest, who cares?"

(whatsapp://send?
text=http://www.vice.com/en_uk/tag/women+on+waves
rebecca-gomperts-
876)

TOPICS: rebecca gomperts (/en_uk/tag/rebecca+gomperts), abortion (/en_uk/tag/abortion), women on waves (/en_uk/tag/women+on+waves), women on web (/en_uk/tag/women+on+web), abortion boat (/en_uk/tag/abortion+boat), VICE (/en_uk/tag/VICE), VICE Netherlands (/en_uk/tag/VICE+Netherlands), VICE International (/en_uk/tag/VICE+International),

RECOMMENDED

The Man Who Reinvented the Wheelchair
(/en_uk/read/profile-pau-bach-876)

This Is How the Mafia Intimidates and Controls the Italian Media
(/en_uk/read/reporters-without-borders-world-press-freedom-index-italy-mafia-876)

The Plastic Surgeon Treating Severe Burn Victims With Spray-On Skin
(/en_uk/read/profile-fiona-wood-876)

The Danish-Pakistani Politician Trying to Make Denmark Less Afraid of Immigrants
(/en_uk/read/profile-kashif-ahmad-876)

COMMENTS

0 Comments

Sort by Newest

Add a comment...

 Facebook Comments Plugin

TOP STORIES

Mar 30, 2016

STUFF (/EN UK/STUFF)

Mac Hackett (/en_uk/author/mac-hackett)

The Sloppy Legal Highs Ban Proves the Government Is Terrible at Drugs (/en_uk/read/psychoactive-substances-act-delay)

Amid more setbacks to the Psychoactive Substances Act, it's becoming clearer and clearer that the British government cannot grasp how to deal with drugs. (/en_uk/read/psychoactive-substances-act-delay)

Joe Bish (/en_uk/author/joe-bish)

YouTube Channel of the Week #14: Games Done Quick (/en_uk/read/youtube-channel-of-the-week-number-14)

People playing games as quickly as they can opens us up to some surprisingly tender moments.

(/en_uk/read/youtube-channel-of-the-week-number-14)

Joel Golby (/en_uk/author/joel-golby)

There Is No More Banter Left After the Hijacker Selfie Became a Thing (/en_uk/read/hijacker-selfie-ben-innes-saif-eldin-mustafa-banter-banter-banter)

Banter is over now. Ben Innes has killed it with one selfie. (/en_uk/read/hijacker-selfie-ben-innes-saif-eldin-mustafa-banter-banter-banter)

Judith Duportail

Here's Why Men Want Less Sex After 30 (/en_uk/read/libido-decreases-after-thirty-876)

"I used to be the person asking for sex all the time. My balls would often ache, because I constantly needed to masturbate. I don't miss those days at all." (/en_uk/read/libido-decreases-after-thirty-876)

Julia Wright (/en_uk/author/julia-wright)

Eerie Photos from Inside a Former Children's Psychiatric Hospital (/en_uk/read/what-its-like-inside-an-eerie-childrens-psychiatric-hospital-turned-opportunity-centre)

Some claim the former hospital—with its history of abuse and neglect—is haunted. Others think it's a great place for a doggie daycare. (/en_uk/read/what-its-like-inside-an-eerie-childrens-psychiatric-hospital-turned-opportunity-centre)

Noor Spanjer

The Doctor Fighting for the Global Legalisation of Abortion (/en_uk/read/profile-rebecca-gomperts-876)

As the founder of Women on Waves, Rebecca Gomperts has manned an abortion boat and flown abortion pills across borders via drone. (/en_uk/read/profile-rebecca-gomperts-876)

Amelia Dimoldenberg

Coming Soon: We Spoke to Movie Trailer Directors About the Art of Teasing an Audience (/en_uk/read/movie-film-trailers-revenant-superman-batman-clips-promo)

Promo for a blockbuster can start 18 months before its release, so there are plenty of trailers for movie fans to sink their teeth into. But what's the secret of one that sticks? (/en_uk/read/movie-film-trailers-revenant-superman-batman-clips-promo)

Ewen Hosie

I'll Never Love a Console Like I Loved the SEGA Dreamcast (/en_uk/read/ill-never-love-a-console-like-i-loved-the-sega-dreamcast-653)

SEGA's swansong console was ahead of its time, but its amazing games were eclipsed by the super-hyped PlayStation 2. (/en_uk/read/ill-never-love-a-console-like-i-loved-the-sega-dreamcast-653)

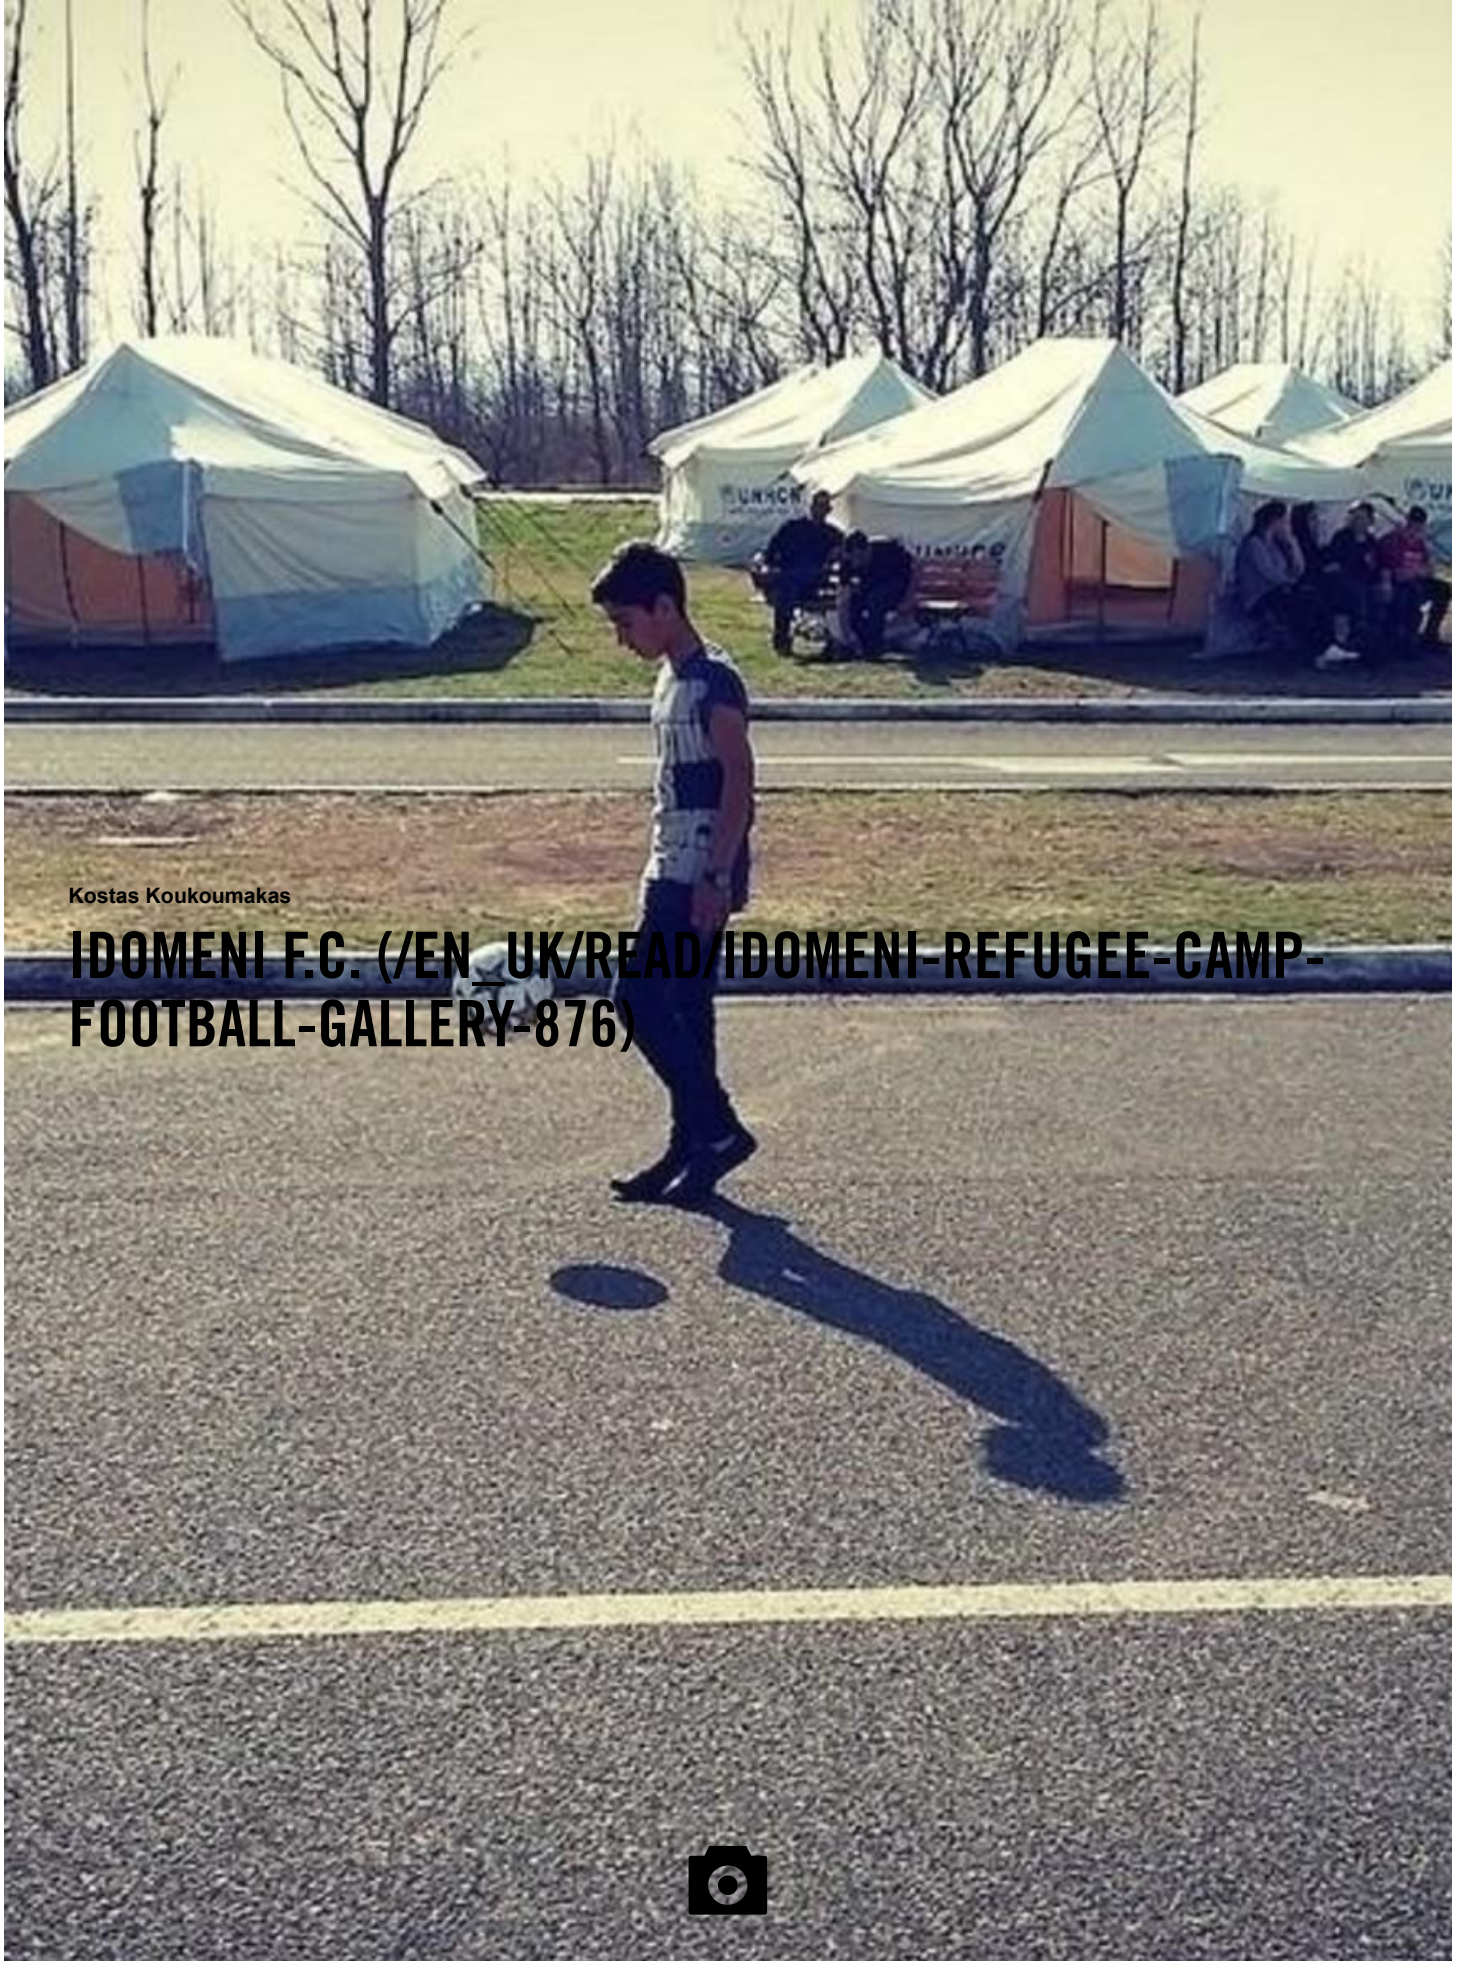

Corin Faife

Crimes Across the UK: Exploring Why Burglary Is So Common in Leeds (/en_uk/read/leeds-why-high-rate-burglary-crime)

In the first of a new series examining why certain crimes are popular in specific areas of the country, we look at why burglary is big in Leeds. (/en_uk/read/leeds-why-high-rate-burglary-crime)

Mar 30, 2016

Kostas Koukoumakas

IDOMENI F.C. (/EN_UK/READ/IDOMENI-REFUGEE-CAMP-FOOTBALL-GALLERY-876)

CJ Ciaramella (/en_uk/author/cj-ciaramella)

Meet the Muslims Suing the Cops for Their Own Surveillance Records (/en_uk/read/meet-the-muslims-suing-the-cops-for-their-own-surveillance-records)

The NYPD worked with the feds to spy on the Muslim community, and now it's trying to beat a lawsuit using a 40-year-old CIA secrecy doctrine. (/en_uk/read/meet-the-muslims-suing-the-cops-for-their-own-surveillance-records)

Allie Conti (/en_uk/author/allie-conti)

Meet the Guy Paying £300 to Live in a Literal Wooden Box Inside Someone Else's Apartment (/en_uk/read/meet-the-guy-paying-400-to-live-in-a-literal-wooden-box-inside-someone-elses-apartment)

In true San Francisco spirit, Peter Berkowitz is already turning the idea into a startup. (/en_uk/read/meet-the-guy-paying-400-to-live-in-a-literal-wooden-box-inside-someone-elses-apartment)

©2016 VICE Media LLC